

UA Gets Cloud Research Funds

A $35,000 contract from the U. S. Office of Naval Research for the continuation of the theoretical studies of the physics of clouds has been granted the University of Arizona.

Dr. James E. McDonald, senior physicist at the UA's Institute of Atmospheric Physics, is in charge of the project. His work in this field is well known and frequently published in scientific journals.